

"My favorite song on the program is "Reasons for the Perpetuation of Slavery," because of the strong and important meaning behind it. It speaks on things that the American person would normally choose to not talk about." Maya Taylor, sophomore

"Reasons for the Perpetuation of Slavery has opened my eyes to how much slavery still exists in the world today. It has really gotten me to think about where the things that I enjoy come from." Paige Brick, senior

"It's a challenge. This piece discusses an issue that still occurs today. And the fact that our choir gets to deliver this message to other people is truly an honor." Kassidy Burrage, junior

"My favorite song in the program is "Reasons for the Perpetuation of Slavery." In "Reasons" you have a message that you have to convey. "Reasons" really lets you know that life is not as simple as you think. People struggle with finances, racism, hate, family issues and so much more. "Reasons" is a piece that puts you back into reality to let you know life isn't all roses." Alyssa Edge, junior

"My favorite song in the program is "Reasons for the Perpetuation of Slavery" because my history is based off of slavery, and sometimes I forget how blessed I am. The people that were put into slavery never got their reasoning as to why they were being forced to be slaves. This song is asking the whole world the reasoning for slavery." Mya Reeves, freshman

"I knew that slavery still existed, but I never knew how involved it was in everything that we use. And as we learned more about the song I also learned that people are not only born into it, but people are tricked into working for someone with little to no pay." Stephanie Salcedo, sophomore

"Before researching about this song, it didn't hit me that there is still slavery today. It has made me feel lucky to have the life and opportunities that I have." Gracie Thompson, freshman
